GREY2K USA, an organization dedicated to saving and protecting the lives of Greyhounds, has recently found out that NBC plans to air a Skechers shoe commercial featuring Greyhounds racing each other. The racetrack is located in Arizona and is known for animal cruelty. Tucson Greyhound Park is known as one of the worst racetracks in Arizona. According to Change.org, GREY2K conducted an undercover study and found out that the track has muzzled greyhounds while they were warehoused in kennels that were small and dark, the greyhounds were not provided adequate outdoor exercise, the dogs were fed raw, expired meat, the dogs injuries were ignored and dogs were ran in dangerous conditions.

People have already contacted Skechers, but the company still plans to air its commercial. It is expected that 100 million viewers will watch this year's Super Bowl and animal advocates are worried that viewers will be whitewashed and not pay attention to the underlying details.

45,000 have already signed the petition, adding your signature could change everything.
